the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million (1990–2000) and is projected to increase by a further 1.5 million by 2020 (Office for National Statistics 2001).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (2000) has identified the need to develop a new paradigm of care for the ageing population, one that is based on the concept of 'active ageing'. This paradigm is based on the idea that ageing is a process, not a state, and that the goal of care should be to promote the health and well-being of older people, rather than to simply manage their decline. The Department of Health (2000) has identified a number of key areas for action, including: promoting the health and well-being of older people; improving the quality of life of older people; and ensuring that older people are able to participate in society.

One of the key areas for action is the need to improve the quality of life of older people. This is a broad concept, but it can be defined as the state of being able to live a life that is meaningful and fulfilling. The Department of Health (2000) has identified a number of factors that can contribute to the quality of life of older people, including: health, social relationships, and participation in society.

Health is a key factor in the quality of life of older people. One of the key areas for action is the need to improve the quality of life of older people. This is a broad concept, but it can be defined as the state of being able to live a life that is meaningful and fulfilling.

Social relationships are another key factor in the quality of life of older people. The Department of Health (2000) has identified a number of key areas for action to improve social relationships, including: promoting the health and well-being of older people; improving the quality of life of older people; and ensuring that older people are able to participate in society. One of the key areas for action is the need to improve the quality of life of older people. This is a broad concept, but it can be defined as the state of being able to live a life that is meaningful and fulfilling.

Participation in society is a third key factor in the quality of life of older people. The Department of Health (2000) has identified a number of key areas for action to improve participation in society, including: promoting the health and well-being of older people; improving the quality of life of older people; and ensuring that older people are able to participate in society.
